

SSHED

April 2007

In the SSHED

Mums making work, work for them

Lots of mothers miss their careers and that extra income, so they're hungry to get back to work. But it's a balancing act between work and family life with many only willing to work shorter hours.

Kathryn MacMillan established Nine2Three four years ago to help mothers find employment with flexible hours. The company, based at the SSHED since 2004, has now helped more than 100 Sydney mums return to the workforce.

"Today's mothers tend to have more pre-family career experience, making them very desirable job candidates," said Kathryn.

Kathryn is encouraging more employers, especially in small and medium-sized businesses, to offer flexible work schedules, telecommuting and other family-friendly programs, so they can tap into this talented and skilled workforce.

To find out more, visit www.nine2three.com.au or call (02) 9501 4923.

Kathryn MacMillan, founder
Nine2Three